STRUCTURED THROUGH MOVEMENT

A father and a son, a painter and a sculptor, are revisiting One Paved Court to exhibit their latest works, which embody ideas of movement and structure.

The making of Simon's and Guillaume's work is fostered by the movement of their tools and the process of manipulating materials. Whether in the two-dimensional or the three-dimensional, these works invite their viewers to contemplate the relationships between structure and movement, both figurative and abstract.

SIMON KLEIN

Simon's figures are never truly static, but are poised in anticipation. The painted marks and gestures are integrated into the pictorial space creating a sense of movement and narrative amongst the figures.

GUILLAUME KLEIN

Guillaume's sculptures make connections between the blacksmithing craft and early 20th century industrial architecture. His exploration of process and material combination generate physical abstractions, which define the space within and around the work.
